Joseph (Joe) Dowdy is a trusted advisor who partners with clients to resolve their most complex issues inside and outside the courtroom. He is the Office Managing Partner of the firm's Raleigh office, and as a seasoned litigation, trial, and appellate lawyer, Joe navigates sophisticated legal problems for clients across a range of complex matters in state and federal courts and arbitrations, including commercial disputes and class actions.

His practice encompasses class actions, commercial disputes and business torts, defense of consumer claims, financial services litigation, real property disputes, challenges to government action, and utilities litigation.

Joe has extensive experience with litigation arising under federal and state laws governing the financial services industry, and clients in the industry frequently turn to him to represent their interests in both consumer and commercial litigation, in class actions, and in response to regulatory inquiries. He also offers clients significant background in risk mitigation and legal counseling outside of litigation. Joe advises executives and business owners on compliance issues, transactional matters, and negotiation strategy.

Clients enlist Joe's versatile approach to resolving issues across a broad range of matters, including:

- class actions and quasi-class actions brought by state attorneys general
- constitutional claims and other challenges to governmental action
- commercial disputes and business torts, including mini-FTC and unfair trade practices litigation
- defamation claims
- defense of consumer claims
- financial services litigation, regulatory inquiries, and lender and servicer liability defense
- representation of lenders and special servicers in litigation and loan servicing matters
- real property disputes and condemnations
- franchise litigation

- utilities litigation, including matters involving alternative energy providers and interconnection issues

Before Foley, Joe was a partner and national trial, complex litigation, and alternative dispute resolution lawyer in the Raleigh, North Carolina offices of two major law firms. He is a 2010 graduate of the Trial Academy of the International Association of Defense Counsel and clerked for the Honorable J. Douglas McCullough of the North Carolina Court of Appeals.
